

Question: Do you have any other questions?

Every applicant will get this question at their interviews. For the majority of interviewers, it is all right not to have any questions.

You can politely say that "this mornings orientation from Dr. XXX was very helpful and I was able to have all my questions about the medical school curriculum from the current students. If I have a question in the future, would you mind if I email you?" This is a great way to get their email so that you can send them a Thank You note after your interview.

During your interview day, keep your ears open. You might in fact have a question at the end of the day that your interviewer could answer for you.
